

WEEK EIGHT · MODULE FOUR

Your Graduation Session

Eight weeks. Thirty minutes. And everything ahead of you.

THE PRIVATE CONCIERGE ACADEMY

Maison Amarine · Confidential · For the use of our mentees only

CONTENTS

Contents

- I Look at what you have built
- II What you bring to the session
- III The thirty minutes, and how we spend them
- IV What you walk out with
- V The door does not close
- VI The last page

HOW TO STUDY THIS MODULE

You made it. Eight weeks, thirty-two modules, six deliverables, and a craft that most people in this world spend three years learning badly.

This session is the celebration and the launch, in thirty focused minutes.

Come with everything you have built, and come ready to go.

CHAPTER I

Look at what you have built

Take a moment. You have earned it.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Recognise, honestly, what you now have.

Eight weeks ago you were curious about a world you had only heard about. Today you understand it better than most of the people already working in it, and I am not being kind when I say that. I am being accurate.

Look at what is in your hands:

- A code of conduct you wrote and signed yourself. Almost nobody in this profession has one. It will still be true in twenty years.
- An anticipation playbook that will make you the person a household cannot imagine running without.
- An operations toolkit, eight instruments, that makes you operational in a strange house in a week rather than in three months.
- A market entry plan with real names and real dates, and a map of a world that most candidates spend a year failing to find.
- A complete candidacy dossier, ready to send, and better than what nine out of ten applicants will put in front of an agency this year.
- An entry plan for the first ninety days of a role you have not been offered yet, which means that when it comes, you will not improvise. You will execute.

AND THE THING THAT IS NOT ON THE LIST

You now know the truth about this profession. Not the brochure. The truth.

That is the rarest thing you own, and it is the reason you are going to last in a world where a great many talented people do not.

CHAPTER II

What you bring

Everything, and one thing more

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Come prepared, and come proud.

Bring

From

Your code of conduct	Week 3. Signed by hand. Bring the original, I want to see it.
Your anticipation playbook	Week 4. Four pages, including the page where you named exactly how you would fail. That page takes courage and I know it.
Your operations toolkit	Week 5. Eight instruments, one page each.
Your market entry plan	Week 6. Three pages with dates, and the map of sixty.
Your candidacy dossier	Week 7. And tell me proudly whether you have sent it. If you have, we celebrate. If not, we send it together, live, before you leave the call.
Your entry plan	Week 8. Five pages, and the ten scenarios written out.

And bring one thing more, which is not on any piece of paper: the question you have not asked me yet. There is always one. Ask it. It is what these thirty minutes are for.

CHAPTER III

Thirty minutes

Short, sharp, and entirely about you

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Know the shape of the session.

Thirty minutes, and not one of them wasted. We move fast because you are ready to move fast.

Time	What we do
Minutes 1 to 5	Your rung, and your first move. Where you are, where you can be taken today, and the fastest honest route to a first role. You will leave this section knowing exactly what your next email is.
Minutes 5 to 20	The scenarios. This is where the session lives, and where it becomes genuinely fun. I will push you, you will push back, and by the end of it you will trust your own judgement in a way that no amount of reading can give you.
Minutes 20 to 25	Your documents. The two or three small things that make the difference between being read and being called back. Small things. Fixable in an evening.
Minutes 25 to 30	Your questions, and mine. And then the one thing I want you to do in the next seven days. One thing, specific, and I will ask you about it, because I am not disappearing when this call ends.

Come with your documents open and your scenarios written. Thirty minutes with a prepared mentee is worth more than two hours with an unprepared one, and you have never been more prepared than you are now.

CHAPTER IV

What you walk out with

Clarity, and momentum

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Understand what these thirty minutes actually give you.

You will walk out of this session with three things, and each one is worth more than a certificate.

You leave with	What that means
A rung, named	You will know precisely which role to go for first, and why it is the right one, and how quickly it climbs. No more guessing. No more applying into the void.
A dossier that is ready	Corrected, sharpened, and sent. Not "nearly ready". Sent.
One action, for this week	Specific, small, and mine to check on. Momentum beats motivation, and momentum is what you will have when you close your laptop.

AND THE HONEST PART, WHICH IS ALSO THE GOOD NEWS

I do not place you, and I never promised to. Nobody can, and everyone who says they can is selling you something.

What I have given you instead is the craft, the systems, the map, and the truth. Those belong to you now. They cannot be withdrawn, they do not expire, and they will still be working for you in fifteen years.

That is worth infinitely more than a promise somebody else could break.

CHAPTER V

The door does not close

This is not the end of anything

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Understand what comes after the session.

The programme ends. The relationship does not.

- Write to me when you get your first interview. I will prepare it with you.
- Write to me on your first day. I want to know how it went, and I will tell you what to watch for in week two.
- Write to me in your sixth week, when everything feels like it is collapsing, because it will, and because you now know that it passes at week ten.
- And write to me when you are offered the role. That is the message I do this for.

You are not leaving Maison Amarine. You are joining the small number of people who have been through it, and that number will keep growing, and one day one of you will be the person who recommends the next one.

CHAPTER VI

The last page

Read this one slowly

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Take a breath. This one is for you.

Eight weeks ago you wanted to work for a family whose life is unlike any life you have known.

What you have actually learned is something older, quieter and far more valuable: how to be trusted with the private life of another human being, how to carry it without ever setting it down, and how to disappear at exactly the right moment.

It is a serious profession. It is well paid, it is rare, and very few people can truly do it. You can. I have watched you do the work for eight weeks and I would not say this if it were not true.

You will be tested in your first month, and you will pass. You will crash in your sixth week, and you will remember that everybody does, and you will keep going. Somebody will invite you, warmly, to say the one thing you should not say, and you will feel the pull of it.

And you will not say it.

And one day, in a room you are not in, somebody will say your name.

Now go and take it.

A LETTER FROM ÉMILIE

One last thing

I want to write to you not as your teacher, but simply as myself.

When I began in this world, nobody explained any of it to me. I learned the way most people learn it: alone, by watching, by getting things wrong in rooms where getting things wrong is expensive. There were evenings when I had nobody to ask, and mornings when I was certain I did not belong. I found my way in the end, but I found it the hard way, and I have never forgotten how that felt.

That is why Maison Amarine exists. Not to sell you a dream, and not to hand you a certificate. It exists so that you would never have to stand alone outside a door I have already walked through.

These eight weeks have been, quite honestly, one of the great joys of my professional life. Passing on a craft you love to someone who is genuinely hungry for it is a rare privilege, and you have given me that. Every question you asked, every deliverable you sent me, every time you sat with something difficult instead of looking away, I saw it. And I am so proud of you.

I hope this has been worth far more to you than what you paid for it. I hope you close these documents with something you did not have eight weeks ago: not just knowledge, but a way of seeing, and a quiet confidence that stays with you long after the last video ends.

You now carry something real. A craft that cannot be taken from you, standards that will outlive any single role, and the truth about a world that very few people ever get to hear. Carry it well, and carry it kindly.

And when your name is said, one day, in a room you are not in, and the right thing is said about you, I hope you remember this page.

With all my heart, and with every confidence in you.

Émilie

Maison Amarine · The Private Concierge Academy · Confidential, for the use of our mentees only