Approaching an Agency

The first email, and how to open a door quietly.

Specialist agencies are the real gateway into this world. Your first message should be short, poised, and easy to say yes to. Below is a template, followed by the principles behind it.

The message

Dear [Agency / Name],

I am writing to introduce myself as a private concierge seeking representation with an agency known for the calibre of its households.

I bring [one line: your defining quality and brief background, e.g. several years supporting a private family, with a particular instinct for discretion and anticipation]. I have recently completed the Maison Amarine programme in luxury private service.

I would welcome the opportunity to register with you and to be considered for suitable placements. My CV is attached. I am happy to provide references in confidence.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

With warm regards,

Why this works

- It is short. A busy agency reads the whole thing in fifteen seconds.
- It is poised, not eager. Confidence and calm signal someone safe to place.
- It makes saying yes effortless: register me, consider me, references on request.
- It never mentions salary, availability quirks, or demands, those come later.
- It attaches a beautiful CV, so the email can stay brief.

Send individually, never as a visible group email. Address each agency by name. In this world, the way you make contact is already the first test of your discretion.
