The Cover Letter

Your introduction, composed with restraint.

In this world, a cover letter is not a sales pitch, it is a first impression of your judgement and tone. Keep it short, warm, and impeccably discreet. Replace the italic guidance with your own words.

[Date]

[Recipient name / Agency]

Dear [Name],

Opening, one line. Why you are writing, and a single, genuine reason you are drawn to this role or household. Avoid flattery, aim for sincerity.

Second paragraph, who you are in two or three sentences. Lead with the quality that defines you (discretion, anticipation, calm under pressure) and give one brief, concrete illustration, without naming past principals.

Third paragraph, what you would bring to their world. Show that you understand what they truly value: their time, their peace, their privacy. Make it about them, not about you.

Closing, one line. Express your wish to speak further, and thank them for their time and confidence.

With warm regards,

[Your name]

Three rules for this letter: keep it to half a page. Never mention money. Read it aloud before sending, if a single word feels like it is trying too hard, remove it.
