HOW TO STUDY THIS MODULE

This is the most practical week of the programme and the one that changes what happens next.

Nothing here is theoretical. By the end of it you will have a real map, real letters, and a real calendar.

And nothing here is a shortcut. If you are looking for a list of names to write to, this is not that, and the reason is in Module 1.

CHAPTER I

How this week is practised

Five exercises, and one of them is uncomfortable

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Understand the sequence.

Exercise	What it trains, and how long
1 · The honest rung	Self-assessment without flattery. Thirty minutes, and it is the hardest thirty minutes in the programme.
2 · The map of sixty	Structured network building. Three to four hours, and it is worth every one of them.
3 · The agency research	Learning to see an agency as a business rather than as a gatekeeper. Two hours.
4 · Three letters	The method of outreach. One hour, and then you send them, which is the point.
5 · The calendar	Turning all of it into something that survives contact with a Tuesday.

CHAPTER II

Exercise one

The honest rung

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Place yourself on the ladder accurately, and defend it with evidence.

Write one page. It has three parts, and the third one is the exercise.

Part	What you write
The rung I can reach today	Name the role. Then, underneath, the evidence: what in your actual history would make a family or an agency take you for this. Not your qualities. Your evidence.
The rung I want in five years	Name it. Then name the three things that stand between the two, specifically, and how long each one takes. If your answer to any of them is "less than a year", check it again.
The rung I was tempted to claim	This is the exercise. Write down the role you wanted to put in the first box, and then write one honest paragraph on why you are not there yet. Nobody will read this except you and me, and it is the paragraph that will save you a year.

WHY THIS IS FIRST

Every letter you write, every agency you approach, every conversation you have this year will be calibrated by the answer to this exercise.

And a consultant can tell, within one line, whether a candidate has done it honestly. Realism is so rare in this market that it functions as a credential.

CHAPTER III

Exercise two

The map of sixty

Build a real, named, categorised network map from nothing.

Sixty real people. Named. Findable. Not "agencies in London", which is not a person and cannot be written to.

This will take you three or four hours and you will want to stop at twenty. Do not stop at twenty. The value of this exercise is entirely in the last third, because the first twenty are obvious and the last twenty are where your actual career is.

Category	How many, and who
Agencies: named consultants	15. Not the agency. The person. Their name, the market they cover, the roles they actually recruit for, and the source where you found it.
People doing the job you want	15. Estate managers, house managers, private concierges, chalet managers. Real people, currently in role, findable. You are not writing to them yet.
Suppliers to this world	15. Private chefs. Florists. Charter brokers. Villa agents. Watchmakers. Wine merchants. Security consultants. These are the people who hear first, and nobody writes to them, and this is the column that will surprise you.
Adjacent and lateral	15. Luxury hotel directors of guest relations. Yacht chief stews. Aviation cabin crew. Family office administrators. Private club managers. The people whose world touches yours at an angle.

For each of the sixty, one line: who they are, why they are on the map, and what you could give them. That last column is the exercise. If you cannot write it for someone, they are not on your map yet, and you should find out more before they are.

CHAPTER IV

Exercise three

*The agency researchLEARNING OBJECTIVES

See an agency as a business with incentives, not as a gate.

Choose five agencies from your map. For each one, produce half a page.

- What do they actually place, and where? Not what their homepage says. What their live roles say.
- Who is the consultant for my market and my rung? By name.
- What do they say they require? Quote it. Then, honestly: do I meet it, or am I hoping they will not notice?
- What is their process? Registration, interview, references, presentation. Any agency that will not tell you this is telling you something.
- Do they charge candidates anything, in any form, for any reason? If yes, they leave your map today, and you write down why.

Then, at the end, one sentence: which of the five is genuinely for me, and which three am I on the wrong list for. Being on the wrong list is not a failure. Not knowing it is.

CHAPTER V

Exercise four

Three letters

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Write, and send, three real approaches.

Three letters. Under a hundred and twenty words each. Real people, from your map, and you will send them, and that is not optional, because a letter you did not send taught you nothing.

Letter	To whom, and what it must contain
One · to a named consultant	A specific first line proving you know what she covers. Your rung, honestly, in one sentence. A request to be registered, with the sentence that you are not expecting anything immediately. No attachment except your CV. No paragraph over three lines.
Two · to someone doing the job you want	A specific line about them that is a fact and not flattery. Your honest position in one sentence. One question that takes them ninety seconds to answer and that flatters their expertise. And the exit line, which makes it effortless not to reply.
Three · to a supplier	A gift, and only a gift. Something genuinely useful to their business, for nothing. No ask at all. Not one. This is the letter people find hardest to write and it is the one most likely to be answered.

THE RULE FOR ALL THREE

If you removed your name from the top, could this letter have been sent by anyone, to anyone?
If yes, it will not be answered, and you should not send it. Rewrite it until it could only have been sent by you, to them.

CHAPTER VI

The debrief

Read after you have written all three

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Mark your own letters against the standard.

6.1 · The five failures, and almost every letter has at least two

The failure	What it looks like, and why it kills
The generic opening	"I hope this message finds you well. I am writing to enquire about opportunities." Deleted at the second line. It could have been sent by anyone, to anyone, and it therefore says only one thing: that you sent forty of these.
The inflation	Any sentence that is technically defensible and practically untrue. The reader has seen ten thousand CVs. She will find it, and she will not confront you, and you will simply never hear from her again.
The ask that costs them	"Could we have a coffee?" You have asked a stranger for ninety minutes of their life, including travel, in exchange for nothing. It is a large ask disguised as a small one, and it is refused by silence.
The absence of a gift	If there is nothing in the letter for them, the letter is a request. Everybody at this level receives requests. Almost nobody receives anything.
The desperation	It is audible, it is always audible, and it is the one thing that cannot be fixed by editing. If you are writing from a place of need, wait a day, and write from a place of usefulness.

6.2 · What a good letter feels like to receive

Short. Specific. Accurate about itself. Useful. And easy to ignore, which is the paradox that nobody believes until it works. The letter that says "if it is not a good moment, please ignore this entirely" is answered far more often than the letter that pleads, because it removes the one thing the reader is defending, which is the obligation.

6.3 · Now the hard part

You will hear nothing from most of them. This is Chapter II of Module 2 and you already know the arithmetic, and you will still take it personally, and you must go back and read it again when you do.

Three letters, and one reply, is an excellent week. One reply is a person who now exists in your professional life and did not exist on Monday. Do it again next week. Do it again the week after. This is the whole method and there is no faster one.

CHAPTER VII

Exercise five

The calendar

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Turn the plan into something that survives an ordinary Tuesday.

Everything above is worthless if it is not on a calendar. Write the next twelve weeks, specifically, with dates.

Rhythm	What is on it
Every week	Three letters. Not four, not one. Three, on the same day, at the same hour, for twelve weeks. That is thirty-six real approaches, and it is more than most people make in a year.
Every week	Two acts of maintenance. A useful article sent to someone on your map. A real congratulation. A supplier recommendation that costs you nothing.
Every month	Five new names on the map, and five removed, honestly, because they were never real.
At ninety days	The follow-up round. Everyone who did not reply, once, with something new and real. Not before. Never "just checking in".
At January and September	The two windows. Your calendar should show, right now, what you will be doing in those two months, because everybody else in this market will remember them a fortnight too late.

CHAPTER VIII

Marking scheme

What I am looking for

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Know how this is assessed.

Criterion	What earns it
The honest rung	I will read the third box first. If it is flattering, or missing, we will have a conversation about it, and it will be a kind one and it will not be a comfortable one.
The map	Sixty real, named, findable people. Not categories. And the supplier column filled properly, because it is the column that most people fake.
The gift column	If you cannot say what you could give each person, you have built a list of targets rather than a network.
The letters	Sent. Not drafted. And each one impossible to have sent to anyone else.
The calendar	Dates. Real ones. Three letters a week for twelve weeks, on a specific day, at a specific hour.

HOW TO SUBMIT, AND HOW TO BOOK YOUR SESSION

- 1. Submit. Everything you produced this week goes into the Submit area of Module 4, inside your student portal. One PDF. Not by email, and not in the chat.
- 2. Book. The moment your work is uploaded, a Book your session button appears in that same place. Click it and choose your slot with me. Do it straight away, while you are there, because the slots for each week are limited and they are taken in the order they are booked.
- 3. Leave me time. Book your session for at least two days after your submission, so that I can read your work properly beforehand. That way the session is spent on the correction rather than on the reading, and you get every minute of it.

The work from this module is submitted together with your deliverable, in a single PDF.
